Brahms said that only a genius could have written such a work and we might say that the demands it makes upon its conductor, soloists and chorus require exceptional artists to convey its unique power and force. Messadarequiem:VI.Requiem:III. The composer, who wanted the best for his Requiem, and who, when visiting London consented to its being played only in the Albert-Hall, due to the concert-hall's excellent acoustics, did not of course approve of all. Yet the piece is neither an opera nor pure liturgical music. In Verdi's own country the Requiem became so popular that it was played, at times, without the composer's consent, sometimes even by military bands or in settings to four pianos.
