In comparison, the tanto is a nondescript blade, lacking the elegance and status of the katana. Some hypothesize that its asymmetric limbs—the grip is positioned two-thirds distance from the tip—is meant for ease of use while on horseback, but evidence suggests that its form predates mounted warfare. The presentation underscored their narrative: no matter where in the world we reside, human societies evolve in similar ways. The true strength of a warrior becomes apparent during difficult times. Warriors have only one judge of honor and character, and this is themselves. New Hardcover Quantity Available: 1. Made in Japan: Part 1.
