In short, it's written in the least Wallace-like manner imaginable. His diversions are tennis, formal logic, and a Midwestern attachment to popular culture which would ever straddle the line between folksy and ironic. I was pretty underwhelmed by the movie I have to say.

We are working to restore service. The entire film consists of long, repetitive scenes. Moreover, he was an enthusiastic dog lover, especially drawn to dogs with an abusive past. Max does a virtuous job of giving the reader a candid view of the complex nature of DFW; the generously endowed writer was often a captious, violent, and tormented soul.
