Diana: I made a few illustrator notes just for clarification. Crane creates an entirely different kind of harmony for "My Lady's Garden," in which the calm passage up and down the F major scale is echoed in the neat borders of blue and pink silver bells and cockle shells as well as by the perfectly alternated sweet human faces of the flowers, superintended by a gardening Mercury, in the full-page illustration. If you ask someone to read your text aloud and they stumble, it signals a scansion problem.

Description: A free fun session for babies, toddlers and their parents or carers. These characteristics of the literary climate describe the complex and often conflicting critical reception of children's books in the late Victorian period.
